50 and Older (30 second) (link)

You're 50 years old, and you may only go to the doctor when you have to.

But if you're 50 or older, you need to be screened for colon cancer. If you only see your doctor when it's an emergency, there's no time to talk about things like cancer prevention. Even if your doctor hasn't talked to you about it, you need to be tested.

Grandparents (30 second) (link)

As a grandparent, I've found myself doing things I never imagined: like driving 100 miles to see my grandchildren in their school play. Most importantly, though, when I turned 50, I got a colon cancer screening test. In Nebraska, colon cancer occurs more frequently than in many other states. You and I can change that by getting tested. Testing can save your life. I made the call. Have you?
